Since being integrated into England’s coaching structure during their successful summer tour across Argentina and the United States, McGuigan has played an influential role in guiding player development, particularly around contact zones and defensive organization.

His specialized knowledge will prove instrumental in refining the back three’s tactical sharpness, alongside assistant coach Andrew Strawbridge, as England prepare to face world-class opposition in the Autumn Internationals. Possessing a deep appreciation for rugby’s technical and emotional dynamics, McGuigan is expected to make a telling contribution throughout the autumn series.

Expressing gratitude towards Sale for their consistent backing, he acknowledged this as a rare opportunity to impact both club and national performance levels simultaneously. I’m fortunate to work with two strong environments, and I’m eager to help England achieve success during the Autumn Internationals, McGuigan noted.

New Wallabies Captain Dismisses Doubts Ahead of Autumn Internationals 2025

The Wallabies’ shock new captain has dismissed claims that coach Joe Schmidt has sent a second-string team into one of Australia’s defining Tests in recent memory. Historic victories against the British and Irish Lions and the world champion Springboks will count for little if the Wallabies falter against Eddie Jones’s Japan in Tokyo this Saturday during the Autumn Internationals 2025.

A defeat would push the Wallabies further down the world rankings, currently sitting seventh, jeopardizing their standing ahead of the crucial 2027 Rugby World Cup draw to be held in Australia next month. To secure a top-six seeding for the global tournament, Schmidt’s men must perform strongly throughout their Five-Test Autumn Internationals tour across Japan and Europe.

Achieving that position would ensure Australia enters the World Cup as pool leaders, avoiding an early clash with heavyweights such as South Africa, New Zealand, Ireland, or France in the knockout stages. Schmidt admitted after making 13 changes to his lineup on Thursday that there was an element of risk in resting several key players.

Promoted to captain for just his third international appearance, Western Force flanker Nick Champion de Crespigny insisted that the Wallabies remain confident and motivated heading into the Autumn Internationals. We've got a strong squad with genuine depth, he said. You look at the lineup players like Angus Bell, who's nearing 50 caps, and Lukhan Salakaia-Loto, one of the best locks in the world.

England Vs Australia: New Wallabies Captain Inspired by Eales as Autumn Internationals Begin

He added: There are combinations throughout myself and Carlo Tizzano, Josh Flook, and Hunter Paisami in midfield, and our Queensland front-rowers Josh Nasser and Zane Nonggorr. We're confident in the performance we can deliver and want to make Australia proud during these Autumn Internationals.

Even Champion de Crespigny admitted it was a bit of a surprise when he learned on Thursday that he would become the Wallabies' 91st Test captain for such a high-stakes fixture. Drawing inspiration from a supportive text from rugby legend John Eales, he expressed gratitude for the encouragement from his teammates. It was very special to me, I'm deeply honored, he said.

John told me to trust my instincts, be myself, and enjoy every moment once we take the field on Saturday. When asked to respond to critics questioning his readiness to lead ahead of the England vs Australia clash, Champion de Crespigny remained composed: It’s a group effort. I’ve got experienced guys to lean on, and I’ll let my actions do the talking.

With England integrating new coaching expertise and Australia testing their depth, the Autumn Internationals 2025 are shaping into a decisive phase for northern and southern hemisphere rugby. For Steve Borthwick, McGuigan’s fresh perspective could spark a defensive evolution, while for Schmidt’s Wallabies, this series represents a crucial opportunity to build cohesion and restore confidence ahead of their home World Cup.
